This is a transcript of text in the video titled “Describe a typical day at Central Bank of Ireland”.

I immediately get a coffee.

The Bank has two cafes:

There's one on the bottom floor, and there's one on the top floor.

So it's nice to be able to kind of, you can actually order your coffee on the app and then it's waiting for you when you get to work. I was about to say you can do it on the bus.

Oh, I have it down. Like I have my routine. I have two buses in to work. On my second bus, I order it so it's going to be ready.

Yeah, it's ready when I get in there.

With the Bank, because we have flexi time, you can kind of - Work up your hours.

Yeah, like if on a certain day, I might wake up really early,

I can come in earlier and build up those hours to use to take time off another time, maybe meet some of the other grads.

It's always nice to, you know, text them and see if they're around.

Usually might have a team meeting in the morning and kind of talk about what's coming up in the week or what's coming up that day. It can vary day to day.

You may have, for instance, in the Grad Programme, we may have classes on.

There might be trainings on, the Bank offers all the trainings.

So I like to pop them into my schedule when I'm free.

So I'm in quite an operational team, and I think one of my worries,

I suppose, when I started was that it would be a lot of alone time working, but it's been quite the opposite. It's very interactive with the team.

There's a lot of calls and chats and people are always coming up to your desk to help out and work together.

Apart from that, you know, getting daily tasks done and investigating things.

It's really good and definitely not what I'd expect.

I think a great thing about it is that I find my days are very varied each day. Yeah.

So it's nice to kind of have that you're not doing the exact same thing every single day, there is a variation of work there.

Yeah, I guess that's like a perception as well that like you go in at 9:00am, you're at your desk, you sit on your computer all day and you know, that is like another, I guess, perception.
